THE EXHIBITION Restoring Byzantium: The Kariye Camii in Istanbul and the Byzantine Institute Restoration and its accompanying catalogue would not have been possible without the generous assistance and support of many institutions private foundations, museums, libraries, archives and individuals. It is thus a great pleasure for me to acknowledge and thank all those who were involved in the various stages of the preparation and installation of the exhibition as well as the publication of this catalogue.

First and foremost, I would like to thank the Samuel H. Kress Foundation, the Joukowski Family Foundation, and the Chrest Foundation for their generous financial support of this project. The Center for the Ancient Mediterranean at Columbia University has kindly provided funds for the symposium held in conjunction with the exhibition. My gratitude goes to Edward L. Keenan, the Director of Dumbarton Oaks, the most important lender to the exhibition, for his willingness to support this ambitious undertaking. Others at Dumbarton Oaks provided help that was essential to the realization of this project. AliceMary Talbot, the Director of Byzantine Studies, was generous with her advice on numerous occasions. I would like to thank Natalia Teteriatnikov, the Curator of the Byzantine Photograph and Fieldwork Archives, for granting access to the painted replicas, photographs, and other archival holdings of the Byzantine Institute of America. I am indebted to her for her help in selecting many objects for this exhibition, preparing part of the checklist for the catalogue, and overseeing the conservation of the painted replicas of the Kariye Camii frescoes. For their patience, support, and advice, I am deeply grateful to Susan A. Boyd, Curator of the Byzantine Collection at Dumbarton Oaks, and Stephen R. Zwirn, Assistant Curator; the precious archaeological finds from the Kariye Camii that they are lending add immeasurably to the exhibition. Joseph Mills, the photographer at Dumbarton Oaks, took new photographs of many of the objects featured in this catalogue. Katherine Hill, Brooke Shilling, and Marta Zlotnick gave skillful assistance with photograph orders.

I would like to thank Julian Raby the director of the Freer Gallery and Arthur M. Sackler Gallery in Washington, D.C., for lending a facsimile of the Khalili Portolan Atlas, and Ilene Forsyth, Professor Emerita of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, for her willingness to let us borrow the field notebook of her late husband, George H. Forsyth. I am grateful to Jim Lewin, President of Image Delivery Systems, for producing large-scale prints of the Byzantine Institute conservation photographs, which form a major part of our exhibition. Many thanks go also to Arthur and Deborah Page of Page Conservation for their treatment of the painted replicas of the frescoes of the Kariye Camii parekklesion; it is their expertise that finally made these treasures accessible after nearly five decades.

At Columbia University, many colleagues and friends in various departments provided crucial support and advice. At the Rare Book and Manuscript Library, Jennifer B. Lee, the Director of Public Services and Programs; Consuelo Dutschke, the Curator of Medieval and Renaissance Manuscripts; and Tanya Chebotarev, the Curator of the Bakhmeteff Archive, graciously made their holdings accessible for study and generously made loans to our exhibition. For their patience and generosity, I would like to thank colleagues at the Avery Architectural and Fine Arts Library: Angela Giral, its former Director; Kitty Chibnik, the library's Associate Director; and Claudia Funke, the Curator of Rare Books.

A special note of thanks goes to my friends and colleagues in the Visual Media Center, who traveled to Istanbul with me in the summer of 2003 to prepare the media components for our exhibition: Robert Carlucci, the Director of the Visual Media Center; James Conlon, Research Associate, able fundraiser and photographer; Jeremy Stynes, the Developer of the exhibition Web site and related educational tools; Andrew Tallon, the Producer of the exhibition documentary; and Olsen JeanJulien, who "built" the threedimensional computer model of the Kariye Camii. Without them this project could not have been realized.

Geoffrey Taylor, architect and architectural historian, served as exhibition designer and provided invaluable advice and generous help with the installation. In Istanbul, Franz Alto Bauer's hospitality and skills as interpreter were much appreciated. In addition, the staff of the Visual Media Center, especially Ethan Robey, were always willing to help with computer problems and other crises.

For their hard work on the wall and object labels for the exhibition, I would like to thank the participants of my graduate seminar "Exhibiting Byzantium": Deborah Brown, Britt Eilhardt, Christina Ferando, Meredith Fluke, Kristian Hansen, Stevie Kasparian, Michelle Morris, Catherine Roach, and Johanna Seasonwein.

Finally, I extend my thanks to five people whose tireless efforts have made this exhibition and catalogue a truly exceptional experience: my colleague and collaborator Robert Ousterhout, whose kind support and knowledge of the Kariye Camii was crucial in many ways for the success of this exhibition; Sarah Elliston Weiner, the Director of the Miriam and Ira D. Wallach Art Gallery and patient line editor of the present publication; Jeanette Silverthorne, the Assistant Director; Lillian Vargas, the most able administrative assistant; and, last but not least, Larry Soucy, the gallery technician, whose wide range of skills was much appreciated and admired.
